Paper Cutting includes the making of units of design or other ornamental details for use in constructing designs of colored paper. It is an elementary form of Applied Design, and may illustrate the essential principles of good design for surface decorations, such as ceiling patterns, wall papers, and carpets. These essential principles are: --1. Flatness.--Surfaces which are to be used as backgrounds for pictures, furniture, etc., should not be so ornamented that their apparent flatness is destroyed. Perspective effect or the appearance of high relief are entirely out of place. 2. Equable Distribution of Masses.--Irregular or large uncovered portions of surface should not occur in the same pattern with closely placed units, unless the intention is to produce a stripe. But pronounced stripes are out of place in floor coverings, and, as a rule, in wall or ceiling papers. Stripes tend to lead the eye rapidly over the surface, and off it; the pattern should simply enrich the background without giving it prominence or making it obtrusive. 3. Harmonious Coloring.--The specially prepared colored papers furnish the very best means for the employment of harmonious coloring in elementary...
