Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Concerns over financing federal elections have become a seemingly perennial aspect of our political system, centered on the enduring issues of high campaign costs and reliance on interest groups for needed campaign funds. Rising election costs have long fostered a sense in some quarters that spending is out of control, with too much time spent raising funds and elections bought and sold. Debate has also focused on the role of interest groups in campaign funding, especially through political action committees (PACs). Differences in perceptions of the campaign finance system have long been compounded by the major parties different reform approaches. Democrats have tended to favor more regulation, with spending limits and some public funding or benefits a part of their past proposals. Republicans have generally opposed such limits and public funding. Democratic majorities in the 101st-103rd Congresses passed bills with spending limits, public financing or cost-reducing benefits, PAC limits, and provisions to close perceived loopholes. The 101st and 103rd Congress bills were not reconciled; a 102nd Congress conference bill was vetoed. Supporters sought a similar bill in the 104th Congress but failed on a Senate cloture vote; the House GOP offered a bill giving parties and local citizens a greater .
