If one kind of food will not answer, another will: birds nests, silkworm chrysalides, the tender shoots of the bamboo, things that nobody else would think of, are converted by the Chinese into food. They are willing, like beggars, to accept of anything. They are fond of disguises, and this fondness in the hog is gratified, together with his secretiveness, subterfuge, and inquisitiveness, when he rolls himself in a slough, and renders himself undistinguishable, or passes for a part of the plastic clay from which he was formed. The Chinese mustache has a filthy look, like something running out at the corner of the mouth, where the tusk of the hog makes its appearance, and is indicative of the same savage disposition. The Chinese and the hog are both characterized by very small feet; but whether the hog would render this peculiarity still...
