God laid thee, Gladys, in her morn of life, Upon the bosom of thy mother dear, God gave thee in the freshness of his youth, Unto thy father s fondest, first embrace: Ah little child! ah tender, two-years child! How many links and golden make the chain Which God has bound about united hearts, The chain of love, claspod by thy tiny hand. Ah, Gladys, little love! what hopes are set Upon that precious baby head of thine, What dreams are dreamed beside the flickering fire, While thy dear mother maps out life for thee; What wishes, mounting on the wings of prayer, Plead in God s presence for thy precious sake. The month of strength and storm was newly met With tender April, month of sun and shower, When little Gladys, like a blossom dropped From heaven s wide meadows, love s one spring-flower, came. Ah, be the season of thy birth, dear child, . A sacred symbol of thy days to come, Be thine the strength and sweetness, duly met And mixed, that marks a queen of womanhood: The strength to choose the right, and cleave thereto; The strength to speak for right with fearless tongue, The strength to strike for right, in time of need; And, harder yet, the strength to stand apart From thine own happiness, if right demand; The strength to die for right if God so choose! But while thy...
