This shows a prearranged construction. The centre of the choir is 6.70 to the right of the normal line. The nave widens to the choir 2.50, and maintains that width in the choir (variation of o.1o only). The left aisle widens 1 foot to the choir. The right aisle does not change width to the choir. The intercolumnar spaces narrow towards the choir, 2.15 (left) and (from the second bay) 1.70 (right). The columns of the nave are set to a curve on the north side, concave to the nave with deflection of 1 foot. (See No. 158.) On the south side this curve-is constructed over the line of columns and convex to the nave (and this construction has been photographed). 158. S. Maria, Toscanella. Curve of the south wall of the nave, looking towards the entrance. As this church shows a very interesting incipient stage of the deflected plans of the great cathedrals of Northern Europe (NotreDame at Paris, for example), great importance attaches to its survey, and especially because of the parallel curves in plan of the nave, which begin at the foundations in the alignment of columns, on the north side. On the south side, the cornice corresponding to that seen in No. 158 is constructively stepped out, together with the corbel supports, and the wall curves from the cornice up, while the line of columns is straight. 159, 160. S. Maria, Toscanella. Section and interior of the church....
