I loved, alas! too fondly and too well: Now looking back to boyhood s happy days, In vain I struggle rudely to expel A phantom that my heart will ever raise. I see her now in all her lovlinoss, Her dashing smile, her laughing hazel eye; Yet, when my fever d hand seeks her s to press, The darling vision does but fade and die. Oft has she sworn to me her lasting love; Oft clasped my hand with fervour to her breast; Oft raised my hand from earth to heaven above; Oft told me wo should never, never part. But now tis o er! What feeling ecstasy; How short her nectar was it mine to sip; She plotted darkly future agony, While words of love still lingored on her lip. O would that she wero lying neath the ground, Her lovely form wrappod in the shroud of death: Then would her heart to dust alone be bound, Then flattery fan no cheek with foetid breath. What now to me is happinesss or love. What now remains but Hades and decay? Thou mischief-loving, many headed thing! With serpent s tooth, or scorpion s tail to sting; And e en on truth and worth a slur to fling Detraction Thee I denounce! May not my lot or cot Be over planted near thy upas spot; And on my heart s best treasures breathe thou not, Detraction The blight on Eden s flowers--tho it...
